

Cuneiform Texts and Fragments in the Harvard Art Museum / Arthur M. Sackler Museum

§0. Acknowledgements

The initial work for this project was undertaken during the spring of 2009 as part of an Agnes Mongan Curatorial Internship with the Harvard Art Museum. I must express my considerable gratitude to Susanne Ebbinghaus, Curator of Ancient Art at the Arthur M. Sackler Museum, for suggesting and enabling this project, as well as Amy Brauer and Karen Manning, whose help throughout my internship was invaluable. I am also very much indebted to Klaas Veenhof, who kindly took the time to read a draft of the Old Assyrian text editions and whose comments and suggestions have greatly improved this manuscript. Thanks are also due to Xiaoli Ouyang and Benjamin Studevent-Hickman for their comments on the Ur III tablets.

§1. Introduction

§1.1. The Harvard Art Museum/ Arthur M. Sackler Museum houses a small cuneiform collection of twenty-one texts and fragments, including two royal foundation inscriptions from the Early Dynastic and Old Babylonian periods, economic texts from the Ur III period, one Old Babylonian land sale document and one fragment of a Hittite ritual text. The majority of the collection is composed of letters and legal texts dealing with the trade of the Old Assyrian period.

§1.2. Most of the objects were gifts to the museum; their history prior to that is uncertain. Donors included Catherine W. Pierce (1938.94 [§4.3]) and Mrs. W. Stewart Hamaker (1963.108 [§5.1]). The group of mostly Old Assyrian tablets acquired in 1983 [1983.97-1983.109; §4.1, §5.2, §6.1, §6.2, §6.3, §6.4, §6.5, §6.6, §6.7, §6.8, §6.9, §6.10, §6.11] had been in the possession of the antiquarian and dealer Charles D. Kelekian before they were given to the museum by his daughter Nanette Rodney Kelekian. An Old Assyrian and a Hittite text came to the museum from the collection of Louise M. Bates and George E. Bates (1992.256.6 [§7.1]; 1992.256.7 [§6.12]). George E. Bates, a professor of investment management at Harvard University, was also a senior adviser to the University of Istanbul, Turkey, and to the Tunisian government. He built a sizeable collection of Anatolian, Syrian, and Near Eastern artifacts.

§1.3. Two more Old Assyrian texts (2000.196 [§6.13] and 2000.197) were formerly in the Hans Silvius von Aulock collection and were sold to the museum through Christie's, New York on June 13, 2000 (lot no. 556). The seal impressions on both these objects have been published previously, as nos. 334 and 335 respectively, in Hans Henning van der Osten, Altorientalische Siegelsteine der Sammlung Hans Silvius von Aulock (1957). The foundation nail of Enmetena (2000.274 [§3.1]) was given by Jerome Eisenberg. It was one of fifteen foundation nails from a Canadian private collection assembled during the earlier 20th century, sold at Sotheby's, New York on June 14, 2000.

§1.4. Only one of the Ur III texts (1953.110 [§4.2]), which came to the museum after being in the possession of Edgar J. Banks, is specifically noted as a "Jokha tablet", suggesting that Banks acquired it at Tell Jokha (ancient Umma).

§1.5. The edition and copy of the fragment of the Hittite ritual text, 1992.256.6 [§7.1], is provided by Daniel Schwemer. The text of the Old Assyrian tablet 2000.197 [§6.14] is currently being edited by Thomas

Sturm (Münster), and will be published by him in a forthcoming article. This manuscript therefore provides editions of twenty of the twenty-one cuneiform texts accessioned by the Harvard Art Museum. The texts are presented in chronological order.

§3.1.2. This clay nail or cone inscription is well-known from other examples and commemorates the building of the E-muš temple of Dumuzi in Bad-Tibira (modern: Tell al-Mada'in). The final seven lines also record the treaty between Enmetena and Lugal-kineš-dudu. For the publication of this inscription, see RIME 1 Enmetena 3 (E1.9.5.3). While Frayne interprets muš₃ as “radiance” (Akkadian zīmu), translating the full name of the temple as “House – Radiance of the Land,” (e₂-muš₃-kalam-ma), this is unlikely. The term muš₃ is well attested in connection with temples and seems to denote the “precinct,” (Akkadian mātu) the general area of the complex in which the temple of the god was erected (see Heimpel 1972: 286-287; for most attestations of muš₃, see Sjöberg & Bergmann 1969: 54-56).

§4.1.2. This text is inscribed on an unbroken clay envelope with multiple impressions of the same seal across most of the surface. The text on the envelope is provided here and records the receipt of dried bitumen for a new boat. The seal of En-dingir-mu may be found on two other texts from Umma (Nik 2, 435 and Umma 93) both dating to the 34th year of Šulgi’s reign and both, like this text, dealing with the receipt of goods from the governor of Umma. The provenience of this text is based on analogy with the other texts bearing En-dingir-mu’s seal. It should be assumed that the month name, “ezem-mah̄”, usually associated with Drehem or Ur, is from the Reichskalender.

obv. 6: The final two signs in this line presumably denote the profession of Šeš-ani. The traces resemble ašgab, or maybe lu₂, and na. It is unclear whether there may be another sign in between these two.

son of Ur-gigir.

§4.2.2. Whole, unbroken Ur III administrative tablet with multiple impressions of the same seal across its surface. The text is a standard receipt for barley flour, but it should be noted that the name on the seal impression differs from the name of the owner of the seal given in the text. For other examples sealed by Aramu with this seal inscription, see: SAT 3, 1534; SAT 3, 1318; AUB cat 01.

and silver, appropriate for the temple.”

Seal impression(s?) mostly illegible.

§5.2.2. Partly broken envelope containing complete tablet. The text is a typical example of an Old Babylonian legal document recording the sale of a house-plot. The transcription given here is a composite text based on both the tablet and envelope. Part of the envelope is missing allowing one to view some of the text on the reverse of the tablet, but the case itself is too fragile for the tablet to be fully removed. The tablet itself appears whole and unbroken, though the surfaces of both are eroded and flaking. Lines obv. 10-12 are visible on the lower edge of the tablet and lines rev. 1-9 may be seen on the reverse. The case has lines 1-11 and then the date formula, rev. 9. It is unclear whether there are any divergences between the versions on each.
obv. 3-4: The name Uraš-awilam-uballit may also be found in YOS 12, 78: 12 where the sign Uraš is copied as MA (it is also listed in the index of personal names as dMA.LU₂.TI); it should probably read Uraš^g. A similar name, Zababa-awilam-uballit, is also known from later Old Babylonian texts (YOS 13, 286 11; 478 10).

obv. 11: Literally, “he satisfied (his) heart.”

obv. 12: An idiomatic expression meaning the transaction has been concluded. For discussion, see Steinkeller, 1989, 34-42.

rev. 4: The name Šubultum, though not mentioned in Stamm’s Namengebung is attested among a number of female personal names in CT 45, 107 3. A woman of the same name also occurs in CT 8, 2a 20 (see Wilcke 1982: 461ff. for an edition of this text) as the mother of a naditum of Marduk called Lamassatum.

2'. a-śar e-¹ta²- [...]
3'. i-śa-qu₂[lu ...]

§6.1.2. Fragment comprising the upper half of tablet; most of what is preserved of the reverse is uninscribed. This text is an important example of one of the official waklum-letters describing a legal verdict. Most similar among the other extant letters is ICK 1, 182, a letter addressed from the waklum to Kaneš, dealing with a verdict given in the hamrum. There are other examples about the city giving a verdict using the same basic formula with either less detail (ARK 3, 94 rev. 6: a-lu-um di₂-nam i-di₃-ma) or more (kt 88/k 1059 1-4, see below note on obv. 5). Both the latter examples are records of legal decisions rather than letters as they lack the standard introductory formula of a letter. For other waklum-letters see Çeçen 1990.

obv. 1: For discussion of waklum as a royal title see Larsen 1976: 129-147.

obv. 4: śugarriā'um – an emblem of the god Adad, before which oaths were sworn. Donbaz argues that this term is identical in function and meaning to patrum “dagger,” which occurs in similar legal contexts (Donbaz 2001: 95).

obv. 5: There seems to be sufficient space for another sign, at least, before i-na, so I have restored gal-en

Thus the “Overseer,” to kārum-Kaneš:
speak! The city
[gave] a verdict, before two śugarriā'um-symbols,
in the sacred precinct [...]
five men [...]

wherever [they ...]
they will weigh [out ...]

(rabi'en) by comparison with kt 88/k 1059 1-4: kišib₃ wa-ak-lim a-lu-um di₂-nam i-na ha-am-ri-im igi 2 geš-gag-en gal-en i-di₂-in-ma (Donbaz 2001: 92). A reading of [gal i]-na ha-am-ri-im is also possible, though based on restoration, as in KKS I, 765: 1-3: igi¹ 2 geš-gag-en² [gal] (ibid. 92 n. 40). The hamrum was the sacred precinct in the temple of Adad and frequent location of legal proceedings.

obv. 6: The role of the five men in this text is unclear. Several texts mention a committee comprising five individuals known as hamištum, “a group of five”, who are called into certain legal cases as arbitrators (see Larsen 197: 166-167). Other examples have five men being called in as witnesses, though they are not described as hamištum but rather śabum (CCT 4, 14a rev. 3: igi 5 śabi-im ...; CCT 5, 3a 30-31: 5 sa-ba-am a-hi-u₂-tim u₂-še₂-ri-bu-ma). I know of no comparable examples which mention 5 awilū. It seems likely that the verdict in this text begins with a statement that these five men were summoned in a legal capacity.

rev 2'-3': This section probably expresses a penalty based on the judgment given in the broken part of the text.

§6.2.2. Whole, unbroken, slightly pink-colored tablet which provides an account the distribution of a quantity of textiles. The nishatum-tax (lines 3, 12), an import tax imposed by the local Anatolian rulers on the Assyrian caravans is calculated at roughly 5%, which is borne out by the figures given here. The balance, paid in silver, is approximated at 15 shekels per textile.
 obv. 6: The sign read as iz- is clearly written UR, but this must be assumed to be a scribal mistake.
 obv. 8ff.: The figures in the second half of the text only add up if we assume that the 35 textiles in the storeroom (rev. 8) are those referred to in lines 20-22.

 rev. 1: me-er-i-šu probably refers either to the son or employee of Amur-Ištar.
 rev. 5: If the palace is entitled to 315 textiles then the balance (15 textiles) should be worth c. $2\frac{1}{2}$ shekels, however the sign before the gin₂ does not look like $\frac{1}{2}$.
 rev. 8-9: For a brief discussion of different storerooms see Dercksen 1996: 69-70 (re: kt n/k 1318); for texts mentioning the chief of the storehouses, see Veenhof 2008a: 221; see also kt 94/k 1106 for the storage of textiles in a buršum.

§6.3.2. This whole, unbroken tablet is a typical example of a “transport-contract” concerning a consignment of silver to be sent, most probably, from Kaneš to Aššur. For general discussion of these contracts, see Larsen 1967: 44-70.

obv. 3: šaddūatum – a transport tariff typically imposed on certain goods bound for Aššur, but also just within Anatolia (Dercksen 2004: 156-157); the subject of šabbū is the transporter, Aššur-malik.

obv. 6: Aššur-malik, son of Ušariya, is also attested in CCT 1, 28a rev. 4, and AKT 3, 96 18.

§6.6.2. Slightly pink fragment of tablet preserving part of obverse. This text is unfortunately mostly broken and the signs on the remaining fragment are quite shallow and worn. Given the participants, the mention of textiles is very appropriate.

obv. 1-2: Waqqurtum “precious one”, is the nickname of Aḥābā the daughter of Pūšu-kēn, a well-known figure in the Old Assyrian textile industry. We have at least one addressed to her from a certain Puzur-Aššur (TC 3/1, 17; edition in Veenhof 1972: 103-109), and, given that the traces may fit, I propose the restoration of his name here.

obv. 4: The reading of line 4 is very uncertain. I suggest that this may be a D-stative from abārum and, if it is transitive, understand the object of the verb as the first half of this line. The deliberate writing of the doubled obv. 7: Anani (also read A-na-li₂) is known from other texts as a transporter of goods (cf. ATHE 59) who worked for Imdī-ilum (Larsen 1967: 30 n. 42).

obv. 8: Hahhum was one of the main towns on the major route between Kanesh and Aššur, where the Assyrians also had a trading colony; it was also known for textiles (Veenhof 2008b: 7-10).

*Speak to Puzur-Aššur,

consonant, however, is not usual for Old Assyrian orthography.

obv. 8: šurbūtum – this term is defined in CAD (Š/3 342) as fourfold(?) wool, but Dercksen suggests that it derives from the name of a town, Šurbu, previously attested in the late third millennium (Dercksen 2004: 16). The adjective here must be understood to describe the feminine noun šaptum “wool”, though it is unwritten, rather than the masculine subātum (tug₂). See also TC 2, 14 6 for another such occurrence (27 tug₂ sag₁₀ šu-ur-bu-i-tum) and TC 2, 7 rev. 9-10, where šaptum is expressly written. There is also an unpublished letter from Lamassī to Pūšu-kēn, which gives the f. pl. form of the adjective, “Rendell” 6: 6 tug₂ ša šu-ur-bu-i-a-tim (Veenhof, private communication).

§6.8.2. Pink-colored tablet which is missing the upper right corner. This text contains information about at least two different transactions: 1) Payment for some item entrusted for Isar-bēlī; 2) A consignment of antimony, presumably for transport. Lines rev. 8 - l.e. 1 seem to represent a third transaction or witnessed claim. obv. 5: This reference to Isar-bēlī's profession is a relatively rare occurrence, as short texts such as this rarely provide detail, even patronymics, for the participants. A gardener is attested as being invited for a drinking party in OIP 27, 10: 25 (CAD N 2, 323) and two gardeners are attested among a list of people in kt 73/k 14: 27. A chief gardener is also attested (see: Veenhof 2008a: 222). rev. 1: Šalim-wardī as a personal name seems to be otherwise unattested.

rev. 4: For the Old Assyrian weight stones see Dercksen 1996: 80-81.

rev. 5: The signs at the beginning of the line are unclear but do not resemble DUMU as might be expected, if this line were to be taken with line 14.

l.e. 1: The sign as written resembles -na- more closely than -šur₃- and one could also read the name as Annā-tāb; Aššur-tāb, however is better attested as a personal name. For Annā as a theophoric element in other Old Assyrian names, see the note to §6.3.2 obv. 13.

Belonging to Šalim-Ištar.

§6.9.2. Whole, unbroken tablet with rectangular shape. This short text is quite atypical for its type. It is likely a transport contract (see Larsen 1967: 44-70 for further discussion), describing the deposit of silver belonging to Šalim-Ištar with Ikunum, as witnessed by Aššur-idī. The syntax is unusual as the witness is named in the middle, rather than after the transaction and the statement of ownership, presumably referring to the silver, is placed awkwardly at the end. Other texts are known to include a final clause following the witness(es) (e.g. CCT 5, 40b), but one would still expect the witness to be named after the main verb in line 5.

obv. 2: If this reading is correct, the use of šanium, here is unusual. It may refer to a second payment on a debt or a second investment by Šalim-Ištar with Ikunum. One could compare CCT 5, 17a rev. 3-4 with: “apart from that I gave her a second amount of 1 ½ shekels of silver,” (ašama 1 ½ gin₂ kaspam ša-ni-a-am adišsimma?). obv. 4: The reading of this name is uncertain; the second sign resembles -lu- more closely and the third sign is difficult to identify.

Seal impression B (van der Osten 1957, no. 334: 2) is the same design found on 1983.106 (§6.10). This impression has been identified as that of Buzāzu. For additional examples and bibliography see VS 26, p. 46 nos. 3 and 4.

The two individuals named in this text, Il(i)-wēdāku and Buzāzu, are likely to be two well-known participants in the trade network, whose names often occur together (for examples of texts featuring both, see: OIP 27, 57; CCT 2, 31a; CCT 3, 32; kt 90/k 235). Il(i)-wēdāku was a junior business partner of Puzur-Aššur (Dercksen 1996: 133-135) and Buzāzu, the son of one of Puzur-Aššur's main business partners (Dercksen 1996: 133). Based on their close association with Puzur-Aššur, his name is restored in line 1. A very similar example would be VS 26, 85, also a fragment of an envelope, addressed to Puzur-Aššur and sealed by both Il(i)-wēdāku and Buzāzu, with the same seals found here.

§6.14. Letter from Aššur-lamassī to Šū-Bēlūm

Museum No.: 2000.197

Date: undated

Provenience: Kaneš (?)

Square clay tablet and envelope. The tablet is whole and inscribed on both surfaces. The envelope is partially destroyed, but preserves multiple impressions of the seal of Aššur-lamassī, the sender.

The text is a 25 line letter sent by Aššur-lamassī, to Šū-Bēlum in Kanesh, informing him that he is sending the silver from the sale of 7 talents and 30 minas of copper, transported by an Iddi(n)-Suen. All the individuals named in this text are also mentioned in the archive of the copper trader Adad-Sululī (Dercksen 1996: 93-107).

§7.1.2. Small fragment of a middle-sized one- or two-columned Hittite library tablet (surface slightly curved), New Hittite script (13th century BC). No duplicate of the preserved portions of text has yet been found. Hittite passages are transliterated in italic type, Hurrian text in roman type.

The tablet contained a Hurro-Hittite ‘Kizzuwatna’ ritual performed by the AZU-priest. A comprehensive edition of the texts of this group was provided by Salvini and Wegner 1986 (= ChS 1/2). Individual phrases and words parallel to those preserved on the present fragment can easily be found in the glossary of ChS 1/2.

3': Cf. ChS 1/2, 72 obv. 9'.

4'-8': Placing morsels of offering substances first into an abrušbi-vessel filled with oil and then into a ḫuprušbi-vessel standing on the hearth is a standard procedure in the rituals of the AZU-priest (see Haas 1994: 650–651; Kühne 1993). These actions are accompanied by the recitation of short Hurrian formulas. The reconstruction of the Hittite text and the Hurrian formulas follows passages such as ChS 1/2, 1 obv. ii 46–56, rev. iii 33–34 and their numerous parallels. At the end of 1.

6' one expects an additional sentence that, according to the parallels, would probably have to be restored as našta ša ninda sig ninda šalakrašša anahi dug abrušbiyaz šarā dāi “he takes up the morsel(s) of the thin bread and of the šalakar-bread from the abrušbi-vessel.” But the room available in the break can hardly accommodate such a restoration.

5': The dat.-loc. of šalakar is not attested otherwise; for the reconstructed form cf. the pl. nom.-acc. nindaša-lādak-ra in Bo 3324 obv. i 6 (see CHD Š 83b; all other attested forms are sg. nom.-acc. šalakar).
